Brigade Target The troubling implications of the conflict in Berkley today. self.AnarchismSubmitted 2 hours ago by Evolutionfire anarcho-communist

I have seen quite a bit of media that has come out of Berkeley today, including watching some of a live stream, and it is very troubling.

The right was able to hold their own to a large degree against antifascists, in one of the most radical metropolitan areas in the country. They gave as good as they got, and they were able to keep a presence in the streets for hours.

Everything that we have vocalized about the Trump presidency, that it has mobilized racists and fascists, that it emboldens them, that it allows them to present their bigotry as simply another political opinion, is coming true.

In the aftermath of this event, It is time for some serious reflection. Now is not the time to sugar coat the truth, to revel in the feeling of success of a clean punch to a Nazi's face, but rather to take a step back and ask what organizational steps can take place to stop this from happening again. What tactics can we use to disrupt their events, even when there are similar numbers to our own? What differences must we put down, and alliances we need to create, in the resistance to fascism?

My thoughts are with our comrades in the Bay who were injured today. The highest level of respect to you.

Bash the Fash.

Now more than ever.

Yes, we seemed to have lost today. The alt-right held their ground. If we wanna take action against them, we need to be better organized and better trained. It doesn't help that it's only the far left opposing them, any trump supporter can be radicalized far easier than any liberal.

I hope we learn from today

Also, what is our opinion on a "leader" someone to rally our troops, direct

Something people on the ground are gonna have to decide amongst themselves if they want. Affinity groups should absolutely have a trusted person calling the shots within the affinity group, beyond that it's a question of organization vs security

I feel that we're going to need a leader, whether we like it or not. Having a leader could immensely improve tactical organization and can prevent the amount of disorganization that happened today. Having someone to help with the commandeering of resources could help us greatly.

Anarchism is a social movement that seeks liberation from oppressive systems of control including but not limited to the state, capitalism, racism, sexism, speciesism, and religion. seemed like the organization and solidarity shown earlier didn't make it past the decision to leave. The rightists seem to have done quite a bit of arming themselves after leaving the park, and that may have been a factor in the disorganized retreat. Either way, there are things to consider.

And yeah I agree entirely, they only claim victory because they got some sucker punches in at the end when antifa was already leaving but overall I saw more nazi's in pain than comrades. Considering they brought in nazi's from all over the country I think we did pretty well.

I honestly think we need a campaign to get more antifa armed. It seems that seems to be the biggest problem with our resistance. They're mostly armed, why aren't we?

permalink embed parent

[-] OldWeb Anti-fascist and Green Syndicalist 2 points 43 minutes ago

Well, if you look at the pic of the stuff the Berkeley PD confiscated, there were 4 large American flags, and roughly 30 that were black and/or red. Not getting disarmed seems to be part of the problem.

[-] The_Great_Cornlord 1 point 31 minutes ago

Not getting disarmed is a big part of the problem, yes, but we need more than flags and bats. We need to take notes from the John Brown Gun Club and get firearms and training. I know getting firearms in states and cities we have a presence in is usually a hassle, but even handguns would help. It would certainly put a psychological element in while holding fash back. Who do you think a fascist is more afraid of? People with only flags and bats, or people with flags, bats, and guns?

permalink embed parent

[-] OldWeb Anti-fascist and Green Syndicalist 2 points 17 minutes ago

I own multiple firearms, and am quite good with them. However, note that open carry in California has been illegal since Ronald Reagan signed it into law, and concealed carry is very restricted. If we're to legally have firearms at events, it won't be here.

Hey guys,

I hope you're all doing well today! I got home a couple hours ago after the riots and here are some thoughts that I would love to share with you guys.

We (ANTIFA) as a unit were so uncoordinated. We got choked off and split in two in the streets. We tried making a push back but no one was willing to fight INCLUDING ME which will be explained in a little bit. We had no strategy, no coordination and no communication. Everyone was in a sense on their own out there even though we were all together. I had to take my leave when I got pepper sprayed in the face and smoked out. I was holding the big black banner that some people have come to see and it seemed like no one was willing to stand with me and my 3 other comrades who were holding the banner. Everyone was off doing their own thing which was VERY anti productive. That being said we got a couple good shots in. Some alt-right scum tried to rush us but we quickly retaliated and ganged up on them. However when we went into the streets, that's where it started going downhill. We almost got pushed up against the wall. Our efforts to form a true black bloc were almost non-existent and the outright aggression from the fascists prevented us from getting anything meaningful done.

Now onto why I was scared to fight. This was my first protest/riot and I was terrified. I like to think that I'm a really peaceful person and I am against the idea of violence so whenever I see someone get beat up, I would charge in but then proceed to freeze up. I have a feeling that some others were like this and I think it would be awesome to have some kind of motivation other than the thought of "If you see a Nazi, punch him." This is just my thinking though.

Ideas on how to fix these issues would simply be organizing a meet up before the protest to get a basic understanding of possible roles we would have or simple tactics to prevent a repeat of what happened today. I have contacted the Facebook page offering help in any way that I can. Let's hope they respond.

[–] ThePoshCatVanilla 1 point 16 minutes ago

I made a retreat once the Trumpets started charging through the smoke. We got split off from our comrades at an intersection and were pushed up the road while the others were on another street. We tried making a comeback but it seemed as though we lost footing and got rushed out. We got some good bites in but not enough to stop them today. The alt-right in a sense won but I feel like we will be back.

[–] Alt-handshakes 1 point 5 minutes ago

I wasn't there but I have watched a lot of videos and streams and it seems to me antifa won. It seems like many here are skeptical so I'll share some links that can hopefully convince you that things didn't go nearly as bad as people think it did.

What is your opinion on leadership? Someone who can organize and control the flow of troops?

permalink embed parent

[–] ThePoshCatVanilla 1 point 14 minutes ago

I would thinking having some form of leadership would be justified. It's important to watch all flanks when coming against the aggressors from the other side. However, that would make the leader a target if he/she were to be spotted. It's an interesting proposition that I think if done correctly, could impact the scale of the riot/protest.

Scrraming extremism at an extremist on the opposite end of the spectrum will only serve to solidify their intolerance of your views.

The "battleground" today is just a way to get all the idiots on both sides to waste their energy fighting, rather than coming to a consensus about other things upon which they might actually agree.

By fighting at all, you are losing, because when you are angry, you are easier to demonize, easier to predict (you will lash out), and therefore, easier to marginalize and/or control.

Civility, compromise, tolerance, and education are the weapons. Punching a fascist will just fuel them even more, which damages your cause and bolsters their resolve, because it makes you the villain in the eyes of the public, especially those who have no horse in the race.

Moderates may prove to be a strong ally, for whichever side wins them over.

I browse r/all, sorted by rising, so that i might voice my opinions of reality in many places and, ideally, be convinced it's wrong by someone wiser than myself.

Acceptance of different perspectives can be enlightening and humbling, which is something we could all, as citizens of the arguably-free world, stand to have more of.

Also, as an American, I take an interest in many facets of our current political climate, because it's something that has gotten a lot of people upset (and hurt) and that's worth looking at.

Also, as humans, we tend to instinctively fear outsiders. So it can be interesting to be an outsider, especially for someone with social anxiety such as myself, just to understand why and how people respond to stuff.

This might be the most liberal bullshit I've ever read. What the fuck are we supposed to agree on?

Punching a fascist will just fuel them even more, which damages your cause and bolsters their resolve because it makes you the villain in the eyes of the public, especially those who have no horse in the race.

Antifascist tactics aren't about convincing anyone. That's what propoganda, education, etc. are for. Antifa is only there to keep committed fascists from organizing a physical presence.

Most liberals I've actually talked to seem happy whenever someone attacks a white nationalist, but I admittedly don't know actual public opinion stats here.

This might be the most liberal bullshit I've ever read. What the fuck are we supposed to agree on?

The idea that humanity's actions, and the consequences thereof, should not be detrimental to survival of life on this planet. For starters.

Antifascist tactics aren't about convincing anyone. That's what propoganda, education, etc. are for. Antifa is only there to keep committed fascists from organizing a physical presence.

What a person intends, and the message they actually communicate, can often be two completely different things. Intentions are much more subjective, and fallible, than outcomes.

Most liberals I've actually talked to seem happy whenever someone attacks a white nationalist, but I admittedly don't know actual public opinion stats here.

Yes, schadenfreude is very real, especially among adversaries. I was not trying to speak for liberals, as I do not consider myself aligned with the tenets they seem to embody. I was speaking more of the general public, and how most people just want to get on with life without fighting. At least, that's my perception of it, from most people I've met. But this will, of course, vary from person to person.

Maybe if they stop being fucking moderates.

Their worth is implicit in their identification. Think of politics as a see-saw, with both extremes on either end. When that see-saw breaks, it does so at the very middle, where the fulcrum is. And also, like a see-saw, even a slight change in the position of the fulcrum will drastically alter the balance of the entire contraption.

Moderates by definition support the status quo, but if when faced with the realities of fascism and nazism they still decide to support their ability to propagate, those moderates deserve one fate. And that fate is the same one any fascists deserve.

permalink embed parent

[–] dub\_tree 0 points 20 minutes ago*

Most people cannot relate to extremist behavior. The populace is comprised of a bunch of "most people." edit: and we are supposed to be governed by the many, not the whims of a few extremists

Moderate does not mean inactive. It means not blindly throwing one's self toward a cause based on emotional response. It can mean many things, and to generalize out of lack-of-perspective only closes you off to new ideas.

But it sounds like you're full of gloom, and bent on getting to decide who deserves what.
