Participants of Black Bloc Protests

Black Bloc protests in the USA, also known as and confused with Antifa protests, have grown increasingly more popular and large since Trump became president. I think it's pretty fair to assume that there are a good large amount of moderate liberals among the Antifa and Black Bloc protests too. While simultaneously I think there would also be a bunch of moderate conservatives among the 'alt-right' protests, although Charlottesville probably was a bit more pointedly extremist (what with all the open exposure and involvement of KKK and other openly self-proclaimed neo-nazi groups who participated and organized it).

In my experience Black Bloc protests usually consist of:

- Anarchists
- Communists
- Environmentalists
- Pacifists
- Antifa
- Anti-establishment activists

All of the above protested heavily during Obama's time in office too (even on his inauguration).

- Liberals (Moderates / Democrats)
- Socialists
- Feminists
- LGBT rights activists
- Abortion rights activists
- BLM
- Ethnic Minority activists (Native Americans are very involved with Black Bloc protests in the USA)
- Hooligans (who randomly participate for the fun of carnage and vandalism)
- A great number of others who do not identify as any of the above

Most of the above have grown quite a bit in size. There are a great number of Hillary supporters who have apparently joined Black Bloc protests since Trump won the elections too.

- And undercover police and FBI

The participation of undercover police in protests and them bait-organizing it is often overlooked and something the common people rarely are aware of. Yet even so these are constantly present not only among closed activist group meetings, under the guise of trying to prevent terrorism, but obviously also during the protests itself. This is true both for far right as far left activist groups.

Usually the undercover police are responsible for:

- Organizing violent protests (and trying to bait people into participating, so they can hand out targeted arrests (before or afterwards))
- Instigating violence and vandalism at protests (to give their colleagues, anti-riot police, the green-light to start using violence against peaceful protests themselves)

What is supposed to be discussed here? This reads more like a blog post.

More informing than discussing, but option for both.

I always found it amusing how paranoid organizers and attendees become. Understandably: false flags and infiltration are real. But the obsession eventually becomes comical.

Police infiltration and false flags to turn peaceful protests into violent ones as well as the concept of "Clean Wars" or "White Wars" is the direct result of the US government and ruling class getting completely shut down by civil rights movements in the second half of the 20th century. Ever since then it has become the standard MO. The genetic make-up or how these protests are organized hasn't changed between MLK or BLM protests today (to give an example), the government counter-protest tactics just changed.

If you aren't going to provide some evidence, this is a conspiracy theory thread.

In general I really hold nothing against most based on their associations alone provided they are honest about it and who they are. It can mean at little or as much as eye color.

I mean I have met plenty of many backgrounds are very matter a fact about how they feel, but they work a normal job, and are pretty much like everybody else in terms of just trying to live.

As for more OT. I get it, people are afraid, people are angry, they want to act and see movement, the problem is with GROUPS it just get so complicated. Sacrificing what someone wants or beliefs, for that of a community.

Never had that compulsion though.

Law enforcement infiltrating groups and promoting violence has been a known thing since the 1960's with the Black Panthers and others. It even made national news when cops were caught doing it at one of the BLM rallies.

That doesn't mean antifa, BLM and other groups aren't capable of committing violence on their own.

at least you seem to recognize that being Moderate is a more desirable label, in any case.

Being a liberal -is- the moderate political stance available within the USA.

<https://krugman.blogs.nytimes.com/20...arody/?mcubz=3>

I've written before that "fanatical centrist" is not an oxymoron; in fact, it's a type that makes up a large part of our pundit class — people so wedded to their self-image as centrists standing between the extremes of the two parties that they cannot bring themselves to acknowledge that one party already advocates all that they are calling for.

And TPM documents the latest example:

President Obama would have this election in the bag, according to a number of leading columnists, if only he would act more like President Obama.

A number of pundits are turning up the volume on demands that the White House offer a jobs plan based on new infrastructure spending, a long-term deficit plan that includes taxes and entitlement cuts and a market-based health care plan, among other requests. Obama will have a hard time taking their advice, however, given that he's already proposed those very ideas.

I kind of wonder about the state of mind that makes a professional pundit — you know, someone whose whole job is supposed to be following policy debates — unable to see, right in front of him, the fact that Obama has already proposed what he demands.

They already are. (since covering up your face legally isn't allowed during protests) But laws are useless when they can't be enforced. Good luck trying to arrest a few hundred or a few thousand people all masked during a protest.

That is why I don't see it as illegal, if people don't take action, shouldn't matter about the other people if they aren't part of it.
